

TRAIL MAKERS FIND WORK IS ENJOYABLE

Acquire Forest Lore and Study
Ways of Animals at Wild
River Camp, N. H.

WILD RIVER CAMP, N. H., July 26.—It will be a hearty lot of Boy Scouts that will file into Camp Archibald Butt in a week or two, "fresh out of the trail" from Washington and Baltimore scouts, now just completing the already famous White Mountain forest trail, have received notice of the intended "outing" to be given them at the Chesapeake Bay Boy Scout summer camp, and are planning great things on their arrival there.

The work here is nearly done. The hardest part of the trail, that between Bull Brook and Moriah Brook, was finished more than a week ago. The Baltimore boys, with Arnold Carpenter and Charles Thurlert, of Washington, are working up toward Shelburne, and are now nearly through with the three miles and a half of trail there. William Thomason, Raymond S. Rogers, Robert Young, Edward Pardee, and Robert Gard, with five Boston boys, are just completing the trail from Moriah Brook to Cypress, and will take their way down that stream toward the main trail early next week. They are practicing alone, so far as direct supervision is concerned, for Scoutmaster H. C. Mason, who had charge of that portion of the work, has been called away on business, and has taken with him three of the Boston party.

Plans for breaking camp are being discussed, and the long-wished-for Washington trip seems at hand. Weather conditions, so trying during the first two weeks of the stay here, are now ideal. The blackflies, such a pest earlier in the season, have practically disappeared; mosquitoes are rare. The nights are cold and the mornings crisp and bright, with a biting wind blowing nearly every day sharply down through the mountain gorges. It is good weather for hard work, and the boys feel it. Nearly the entire work done has been accomplished during the past three weeks, as against only a short distance accomplished during the three preceding.

The boys were given a new insight into their work this week when the portion of the trail between Bull Brook and Moriah Brook was measured. Forest Officer Benedict, in charge of the Government reservation here, arrived with a chain and other instruments and proceeded to take account of the amount of work completed. Every section of the work was examined with critical care, and every foot of the way measured with the surveyor's chain and duly recorded. The turns and switchbacks constructed with such great labor by the boys, add greatly to the distance covered and the amount of trail made in this manner will be credited to them when the bill is presented to the government.

The boys have been especially fortunate in finding opportunities to study animal life. There is a big bear with cubs over on the Cypress trail. She has been heard calling to her cubs on a number of occasions. Scratches on the bark of trees, old stumps torn apart and trees with honey bee nests broken down bear evidence of her presence. No wonder that one night during the past week some of the boys, sleeping at the main camp, turned out in the night and rallied forces into one tent, where they lighted a campfire for protection.

It was a cold night with a hard wind blowing, just the sort of time for wild animals to be abroad. Owls hooted, foxes barked, and even the "haloo" of bear could be heard plainly. No one was frightened, of course, but it seemed better to get close together for company. Bear have been seen by the boys so that there was reason for their feeling a trifle "scary" at night in the midst of the wilderness.

Many of the youngsters have photographs of different animals, pictures of deer, some of them taken at a distance of only a few feet, are common. Pictures of bear have not been taken because the boys have not had cameras along when they were "brun". The few foxes seen and the long-tailed "bobcat" have not been recorded. They would not wait long enough, the boys say, and indeed rapid work is required in such chance meetings as these have been. Bird pictures are easy to take. The ordinary singing birds are so tame they can be approached to within a few feet. They are well known from their calls and can be stalked readily. Thus far, however, the bird photograph most coveted, that of the ruffed grouse, has not been secured.

LEARN WOOD LORE IN LIFE AT CAMP BUTT

Scouts Study Birds and Mammals on Their Long Walks
With Director.

Variety of incident makes the out-of-door life at camp Archibald Butt, Chesapeake Beach, Md., of never failing interest. Every day something pleasant and exciting turns up, that is neither indicated on the regular program nor posted on the bulletin board outside of the mess hall. Long and healthful "hikes" are taken each day through the surrounding woodland, and Dr. Charles Eastman, camp director, directs the attention of the scouts to the birds and mammals in the woods.

A. C. Moses, president of the District council, Edgar S. Martin, commissioner, and other officers of the council, together with representatives from the national organization in New York city, were visitors at the camp on Friday, where they witnessed demonstrations in life saving by a crew of boys enlisted by the Red Cross.

Many of the officials remained at the camp over night. Radio Operator Thomas Nikirk is experimenting with his wireless outfit, receiving and sending messages at long distances. Recently he attempted to receive a wireless message from Washington, but did not succeed with the twenty-foot aerial now in use at the camp.

Thirty-two scouts will leave Washington tomorrow morning on the 11:20 o'clock train for the Chesapeake Beach, where they will be met by the scouts' motorboat Sea Scout, which will transport them to the camp. They are Jean Veditz, Richard Saunders, Julian Steward, Raymond M. Peaks, Edward Willis Dunlop, Raymond Brookmire, Philip Hardie, George W. Road, Jr., Alexander McQueen Dunlop, Kenneth W. Boyd, Roy M. Belnap, A. J. McChordy, Gilbert Slenta, Jack Childress, Francis H. Fant, Carl Tyler, Edward G. Wingate, B. B. Wilson, Knut Nilsson, Hertram Hackenberger, Donald E. Brooks, William B. Roswell, Clarence Shroat, James M. Prober, Lee Roy Hutchinson, King Ridgeway, Jack O'Donoghue, Jr., Warren Lovins, Randolph Carroll, Paul Grove, Guy H. Keeton, and Mitchell Carroll.
